CSUH News Services

The American Historical Association at its annual meeting in Chicago has presented Cal State Hayward communication instructor Rick Tejada-Flores the John E. O'Connor Film Award.

Tejada-Flores, a lecturer, and Judith Ehrlich were honored for their work in producing and directing the documentary film The Good War and Those Who Refused to Fight It.

"When Rick Tejada-Flores and I began collaborating on this project, we focused on 'the good war' as the most dramatic and challenging period for pacifists," Ehrlich said in a published statement.

Flores is a partner, produced the documentary in association with Independent Television Service. The Good War and Those Who Refused to Fight It aired nationally on PBS and locally in the Bay Area on KQED.

The award, which honors John E. O'Connor and his teaching and research of film and history, recognizes outstanding interpretations of history through the medium of film or video. The award also acknowledges imaginative use of the media, effective presentation of information and ideas, sensitivity to modern scholarship and accuracy.

Previously Tejada-Flores was producer and director of The Fight in the Fields: Cesar Chavez and the Farmworkers' struggle, a documentary about the first successful farmworkers union and its leader, Chavez. The film also was aired on PBS.

Currently Tejada-Flores, a resident of Emeryville, is working on two more documentaries. One is about 20th century Mexican muralist Jose Clemente Orozco, while the other, titled Race is the Place, reports on race relations. No TV airdates for these productions, also planned for PBS, have been set.

"...we focused on 'the good war' as the most dramatic and challenging period for pacifists,"

The film tells the story of more than 40,000 conscientious objectors who refused combat service during World War II.

Tejada-Flores said, "We were the generation that was changing the world, and when we built a mass movement against the war, we were doing something that had never been done before."
